

Share the Gospel with Kids Without Confusing Jargon

Most of us don't realize the amount of spiritual or church jargon that has crept into our language. When we ask children to "open their hearts to Jesus" or tell them that "Jesus paid the price for your sins", we often leave them victims of confusion.

Get the gospel message across to children effectively. Avoid barriers and distractions that jargon often create.

When you say this:

The child may think this:

You should say this instead:

Ask Jesus into your heart.

How is He going to fit?

Start a personal relationship with Jesus today.

Jesus paid the price for your sins.

How much does a lie cost?

Jesus allowed himself to be punished instead of you.

Jesus is knocking on the door to come into your heart.

What door?

Is that the sound coming from my heart?

Jesus wants to be your friend.

Let Jesus be Lord of your life.

Lord of the Rings?

Follow what Jesus says and ask him to help you do the right thing.

He rose again.

He rows again? In a fishing boat... gently down the stream.

Jesus became alive again.

God is a Holy God.

God is full of holes? Must be the nails.

God is good and perfect.

Man has sinned.

I'm not a man. I'm a girl.

We all have done wrong things.

So that you can have eternal life.

And never, ever, ever die?

So that you can be with God forever, and when you die you will go to heaven.

The grace of God...

The grays of God? That's the color of heaven before it rains, right?

God is very loving, kind and generous.

What we say is not necessarily the same as what the child hears. Removing spiritual or church jargon from your gospel presentation is one big step you can take to improve clarity and understanding.
